BLACK PAPER TO BECOME DAILY

Beginning Feb. 26, The Evening Match, a black newspaper, will begin publishing on a daily basis under the new name of The Washington Daily Match.

The newspaper, with business offices at 2000 P St. NW, said it will become the first black daily in the District and will "serve in a dignified manner, the needs of the inner-city."

Its editor and publisher, Eugene M. Garner, reported in the past to be one of black militant H. Rap Brown's contacts with the public, said the paper expects to publish 50,000 copies on Feb. 26.

Garner said the paper intends to form a black crime commission which will provide information on crime and welfare to help the city in getting "to the root of the crime problem." He said the newspaper also will serve inner-city businessmen hurt by the 1968 civil disturbances.
